Sincerity is a 16th-Century word that expressed the concept that people who live a moral life must be responsible. Neoclassic literary characters, such as Moliere's artificial, deceitful villains. Such literature condemned exhibition of the self and promoted 'authenticity,' a strenuous moral qualification.

Sincerity and Authenticity is a 1972 book by Lionel Trilling, based on a series of lectures he delivered in 1970 as Charles Eliot Norton Professor at Harvard University. The lectures examine what Trilling described as "the moral life in process of revising itself", a period of Western history in which (argues Trilling) sincerity became the central aspect of moral life (first observed in pre-Age of Enlightenment literature such as the works of Shakespeare), later to be replaced by ...
